HIGH LINE CANAL CONSERVANCY SELECTS AWARD-WINNING PLANNING TEAM FOR BELOVED 71-MILE RECREATIONAL TRAIL

The community wrote the vision, now the Conservancy will bring it to life!

Denver, CO (January 23, 2018) – The High Line Canal Conservancy has launched the second phase of significant planning for the High Line Canal, a beloved 71-mile regional trail. This multi-jurisdictional planning initiative follows on the heels of the completion of the Community Vision Plan in early 2017. The nationally recognized planning team includes Denver-based Livable Cities Studio led by Meredith Wenskoski, and the Boston-based team of Agency Landscape + Planning and Sasaki, led by Gina Ford. The team will focus on developing a Framework Plan, which is anticipated to be complete in the fall of 2018 and result in a multi-year implementation plan. It will include complete plans for signage and wayfinding, as well as landscape guidelines for all 71 miles.

"Cities across the country are grappling with how to deal with 20th century infrastructure. The High Line Canal Framework Plan will advance the community-driven vision into tangible physical ideas that will become a regional treasure and a national model of best practices." - Gina Ford, Agency Landscape + Planning

The Conservancy's unprecedented community outreach effort in 2016, which engaged over 3500 people, led to an inspired long-term Community Vision for the High Line Canal that will be used as inspiration to develop the Framework Plan for the entire 71-mile system. The community-driven Vision Plan, endorsed by Denver Water and 10 governmental jurisdictions along the 71 miles, outlines a set of guiding principles - that the Canal remain a natural, connected and continuous, varied, managed and enhanced resource for the region.

Guided by these principles, the final Framework Plan will further ensure the Canal reaches its greatest potential as an environmental, recreational, social, historic and economic asset. The plan will focus on:

- Additional open space/parks and trailheads with user amenities
- Canal branded directional and interpretive signage
- Crossing safety and trail gap design solutions;
- Environmental guidelines for landscape, tree planning and stormwater
- Health and education programs for increased access and use
- Long-term permanent protection and maintenance

PUBLIC INPUT: There will be multiple platforms for public input throughout the year, including public open houses in April and September. Continued support and engagement from the citizens of the region is vital to ensure the future of the Canal is reflective of the public vision.

“Throughout this next phase of planning for the High Line Canal, we have an incredible opportunity to develop creative planning and design solutions that are community-specific, but reflective of the Community Vision Plan for all 71 miles of the Canal. One of the keys to success will be inclusive and authentic engagement among all the jurisdictions.” – Meredith Wenskoski, Livable Cities Studio.

In 2017, the Conservancy kicked off its first ever membership campaign. To date more than 750 members have heeded the call to Be A High Line Hero. In addition to membership, other ways to get involved include:
